Dead Man Dug Up When Cell Phone Didn't Work

A Montenegrin man who was buried with his cell phone had to be dug up again when after his family realised they had forgotten to include the SIM card.

Arso Banjeglav who was 67 when he died used to spend hours on his phone chatting to his mates and told his son Brano that he wanted the phone buried with him when he died.

But, after the funeral in Cetinje, Montenegro, the family discovered his grandson, who was playing with the device, had taken out the SIM card.

Brano Banjeglav, 38, said: "We put the phone in the coffin as he wanted, but my 10-year-old son had been playing with it and had taken the card out without my knowledge.

"So now we have got to dig him up again to put it in the phone."
